THE INFINITY MAP CHURCH WORKSHOP · 8 WEEKS (WITH 5-WEEK TRACK)

Eight weeks, one finished plan

Each session follows the same rhythm (see the Facilitator Guide): gather and pray, hear the Word, walk the workbook pages, discuss, and go home with a clear assignment. Here is the whole season:

Week	Theme	Workbook focus
1	Because Love Plans Ahead	Getting started · Personal Information
2	The People We Love	Family Tree · Key Contacts
3	Speaking When You Can't	Medical Directives
4	Faithful Stewardship	Financial Overview
5	A Celebration of Life	Funeral Wishes
6	What We Leave Behind	Asset Distribution
7	The Story Only You Can Tell	Life Story · Letters to Loved Ones*
8	Wisdom for Generations	Faith Statement · Wisdom & Milestones* · Celebration

*Weeks 7–8 draw on the Legacy Edition's story and wisdom sections. Households using the Essentials Edition spend these weeks reviewing, finishing, and writing a simple letter to their family on their own paper — the assignment boxes include this option every time.

The 5-week track

Session	Combines
1	Weeks 1 + 2 — Love plans ahead · people & contacts
2	Weeks 3 + 4 — Medical wishes · finances
3	Weeks 5 + 6 — Funeral wishes · what we leave behind
4	Week 7 — The story only you can tell
5	Week 8 — Wisdom for generations · celebration

On the 5-week track, use the first listed week's prayers and scripture for the session, touch both weeks' workbook sections in the walk-through, and pick the strongest two discussion prompts from each week.

Opening prayer: “Father, teach us to number our days, that we may gain hearts of wisdom. Thank You for every person in this room and the families they love. Take away our fear of this subject, and replace it with the peace of preparation. In Jesus' name, amen.”

Scripture: “Teach us to number our days, that we may gain a heart of wisdom.” — Psalms 90:12 · also read Proverbs 13:22

Teaching notes (share in your own words)

- When someone we love passes, their family faces hundreds of decisions in their hardest hours — usually with no idea where anything is. That's the problem this workshop solves.
- Scripture never treats planning as faithlessness. Numbering our days is called wisdom; leaving an inheritance — of order, of story, of faith — is called good.
- The Infinity Map is one book that holds it all: who we are, what we have, what we want, and what we believe. Finished, it may be the most practical gift of love our families ever receive.
- Nobody shares their answers here — ever. The group is for courage; the writing happens at home. (Read the privacy ground rules from the Facilitator Guide now.)

Walk the pages

Hand out workbooks. Tour the whole book briefly — read the section titles aloud so the road ahead is visible. Then open Personal Information: legal name, vital statistics, the details a death certificate requires. Explain: pre-filling this page spares a grieving family hours of searching during their hardest week.

Discussion prompts

1. When a death has touched your family, what was the hardest practical part — the paperwork, the searching, the deciding?
2. What almost kept you from signing up for this workshop?
3. Who are you doing this for? Name them — out loud or just in your heart.

At home this week: Complete the Personal Information section. If typing, save the file somewhere you'll remember; if writing, pick the drawer or binder where your Map will live from now on.

Closing prayer: “Lord, we begin this work as an act of love. Guard our hearts from fear, and let every page we fill be a blessing waiting for the people we love. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, thank You for family — the ones we were born to, the ones we chose, and the church family in this room. As we write their names this week, remind us that every name is a gift from You. Amen.”

Scripture: “Behold, children are a heritage from the Lord...” — Psalm 127:3 · also read 1 Timothy 5:8

Teaching notes

- This week is the gentlest in the whole workshop — writing down the people we love and how to reach them. Start here and momentum follows.
- In a crisis, family calls family — but only if numbers, addresses, and names are findable. The same for the attorney, the doctor, the pastor, the insurance agent: one page of contacts can replace a hundred frantic calls.
- Providing for our household (1 Timothy 5:8) includes providing information. It's a modern form of a very old faithfulness.

Walk the pages

Open the Family Tree section: spouse, children, parents, siblings, grandchildren. Then Key Contacts: attorney, financial advisor, insurance, physicians, pastor, closest friends, employer. Point out how many of these exist only in one person's phone today.

Discussion prompts

1. If you were unreachable, could your family find the phone number of your doctor? Your insurance agent? How would they even begin?
2. Which contact on this list would your family never think of on their own?
3. Filling in a family tree stirs memories — happy and hard. What surprised you as you thought about yours?

At home this week: Complete the Family Tree and Key Contacts sections. Bonus: text one sibling or adult child and confirm their current address — you'll be surprised how often it's changed.

Closing prayer: “Lord, every name we wrote this week is someone You love even more than we do. Bless them, keep them, and knit our families closer through this work. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, our times are in Your hands. Give us courage this week for the tenderest questions, and peace in knowing that preparing our answers is a mercy to the people who would otherwise have to guess. Amen.”

Scripture: “The heart of man plans his way, but the Lord establishes his steps.” — Proverbs 16:9 · also read Ecclesiastes 3:1–4

Teaching notes

- This is the week most people have been avoiding — medical wishes and end-of-life care. Name that out loud; naming it shrinks it.
- Here's the truth that changes minds: if you don't decide, someone you love will have to — in a hospital hallway, exhausted, guessing. Writing your wishes down isn't giving up on life; it's taking a weight off your family's shoulders.
- The workbook covers living wills, healthcare power of attorney, life support preferences, organ donation. Discussing wishes with family and doctor — and putting legal documents in place with an attorney — is the follow-through this section prepares.
- Pastoral note: expect tender moments tonight. Follow the Facilitator Guide: pause, acknowledge, pray. The schedule serves the people.

Walk the pages

Open Medical Directives: living will, healthcare POA, end-of-life wishes, organ donation, current medications and conditions. Emphasize: every box is optional, “discuss with family” is a valid answer, and nobody shares their choices here.

Discussion prompts

1. Why do you think families avoid this conversation more than any other?
2. Have you seen a family carry the weight of deciding without guidance? What would guidance have changed?
3. What's one medical wish you already know — and does anyone else on earth know it yet?

At home this week: Complete what you can of Medical Directives. Circle anything you're unsure of — those circles are your conversation list for your doctor, your family, and your attorney.

Closing prayer: “Lord, our lives have always been in Your hands. Thank You for the peace that comes from preparing, and be near to every heart this week's pages touched. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, everything we have is Yours — we’re just the stewards. Help us this week to put the household in order, so that what You’ve entrusted to us blesses instead of burdens the people we leave it to. Amen.”

Scripture: “Know well the condition of your flocks, and give attention to your herds.” — Proverbs 27:23 · also read Matthew 25:14–21

Teaching notes

- Money is where grief gets complicated. Unknown accounts go unclaimed; unknown debts surprise; unknown policies never pay out. A one-page financial overview prevents all three.
- Stewardship isn’t just managing what we have — it’s making sure it can be found and handled by the people who come after us.
- Safety first, repeat it twice: the workbook asks for last four digits only. The Map records where things are — never the keys to them. Full details stay in a secure place, and the Map simply notes where that place is.
- This section makes the eventual meeting with an attorney or financial advisor dramatically shorter and cheaper. It’s preparation, not advice.

Walk the pages

Open Financial Overview: bank accounts, investments, insurance policies, debts, and financial contacts. Show the last-four-digits pattern on the page itself. Remind everyone: these pages are completed at home, never in the room.

Discussion prompts

1. Have you heard of money going unclaimed or a policy never paying out because no one knew it existed? What happened?
2. Who in your household knows where the financial life actually lives? What if that person is the one who’s gone?
3. What does “faithful stewardship” mean to you in this season of life?

At home this week: Complete the Financial Overview — last four digits only — and write down where your detailed records live. If that place doesn’t exist yet, creating it (a fireproof box, a labeled folder) is this week’s real assignment.

Closing prayer: “Lord, thank You for providing for us all our days. Let what we recorded this week be found faithful — well ordered, well kept, and a blessing to those who follow. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, because Jesus lives, we do not grieve as those without hope. As we plan our homegoing this week, fill the room with resurrection joy — let these pages read like a celebration. Amen.”

Scripture: “Let not your hearts be troubled... I go to prepare a place for you.” — John 14:1–3 · also read 1 Thessalonians 4:13–14

Teaching notes

- A believer's funeral is a homegoing — and this week, everyone gets to plan their own celebration: the songs, the scriptures, who speaks, what's remembered.
- Ask any pastor: the families at peace during a funeral week are the ones who knew the wishes. The families in turmoil are the ones guessing — about caskets, about flowers, about what Mom would have wanted. Every detail written here is a decision grief never has to make.
- This can actually be the sweetest week of the workshop. Encourage folks to have fun with it — favorite hymns, the verse that carried them, the story they want retold.

Walk the pages

Open Funeral Wishes: service preferences, casket, flowers, music, minister, and related choices. Point out how specific the workbook lets people be — and that “let my family choose” is also a choice, as long as it's written.

Discussion prompts

1. What's the most meaningful funeral or homegoing you've ever attended? What made it so?
2. Is there a hymn or scripture you already know you'd want? What does it mean to you? (Let this one breathe — it brings out beautiful stories.)
3. How does resurrection hope change the way we plan a funeral?

At home this week: Complete the Funeral Wishes section. If a hymn or verse came to mind tonight, write it in before you sleep — those first instincts are usually the truest.

Closing prayer: “Lord Jesus, You have prepared a place for us — so we can plan our homegoing with joy instead of dread. Thank You for a hope stronger than death. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, You’ve given each of us things to care for — homes, keepsakes, treasures small and large. Help us hand them on with wisdom and love, so that what we leave behind draws our families together and never apart. Amen.”

Scripture: “A good man leaves an inheritance to his children's children.” — Proverbs 13:22 · also read Ecclesiastes 2:18–21 (honest about the problem)

Teaching notes

- Hard truth, said with love: it's rarely the money that divides families — it's the piano, the ring, the tools, the quilt. The things with stories attached.
- Families fight when wishes are unknown, because everyone's guess feels equally right. A written wish ends the argument before it begins.
- The goal isn't a legal document tonight (that's the attorney's work, with your Map in hand) — it's clarity: what should go to whom, and just as precious, why. “This was your grandmother's” turns an object into an inheritance.

Walk the pages

Open Asset Distribution: the record of belongings and who should receive them. Encourage adding the one-line story behind meaningful items — it's the difference between distributing property and passing down heritage.

Discussion prompts

1. Do you own something whose story would be lost if you never wrote it down? Tell us the story — not the plan for it, just the story.
2. Why do you think small keepsakes cause bigger conflicts than bank accounts?
3. Is there something you'd rather give away while you're living — and see the joy yourself?

At home this week: Complete the Asset Distribution section. Walk your home with fresh eyes — the items that matter aren't always the ones worth money.

Closing prayer: “Lord, hold our families together across the generations. May everything we pass down carry love with it, and may nothing we leave behind divide the people we prayed for tonight. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, You have been writing our stories since before we were born. This week, help us tell them — honestly, gratefully, and in our own voice — so the generations after us know what You have done. Amen.”

Scripture: “We will tell to the coming generation the glorious deeds of the Lord.” — Psalm 78:4 · also read Deuteronomy 6:6–7

Teaching notes

- Everything until now protected your family from confusion. Starting this week, you give them something greater: yourself. Your story, in your own words, is the part of the inheritance money can't touch.
- Two generations from now, nobody will remember the sound of your voice — unless you write it down. The childhood home, how you met your spouse, the hardest year, the answered prayer: these are the pages grandchildren will read at your kitchen table long after.
- Letters to loved ones may be the most precious pages in the whole Map. A letter read after a homegoing is a final embrace. Don't let anyone skip it because it feels hard — hard is where the treasure is.
- Essentials Edition households: this week's assignment is a handwritten letter to your family on your own paper, kept with your Map. Same treasure, simpler page.

Walk the pages

Open the Legacy Edition's life story prompts and letters pages. Read two or three prompts aloud so the room hears how inviting they are. Suggest handwriting these sections even for the computer-typers — your handwriting is part of the gift.

Discussion prompts

1. What's one story from your life your grandchildren would never believe — and absolutely need to know?
2. Do you have a letter, Bible margin note, or recipe card from someone who's gone? What does it mean to you now?
3. If you could sit your great-grandchildren down for five minutes, what would you tell them?

At home this week: Write one life story page and begin one letter to someone you love. Don't aim for eloquent — aim for yours.

Closing prayer: “Lord, thank You for every chapter You've written in us — the bright ones and the hard ones You redeemed. Give us the words this week, and let our stories point our families to You. Amen.”

Opening prayer: “Father, we came eight weeks ago carrying a task we had avoided for years — and You have carried us through it. As we finish, let the last pages be the best ones: our faith, our wisdom, our blessing on the generations to come. Amen.”

Scripture: “One generation shall commend your works to another.” — Psalms 145:4 · also read 2 Timothy 4:7

Teaching notes

- Final week: the faith statement, the wisdom topics, the milestone messages — words your family will open on wedding days and hard days alike. This is your voice, waiting faithfully in the future.
- A faith statement isn't a theology exam. It's simply: what do you know of God, after all these years? Say that.
- Then the two commissions that make everything real: store your Map where your family can find it, and tell one person where it is. A finished Map nobody can find helps nobody. Have everyone decide both — tonight, before they leave.
- And the yearly habit: every New Year or birthday, pull it out and update what changed. A living document, not a finished one.

Celebrate

Don't just end — land it. Share a meal or dessert. Invite one or two volunteers to say what this season meant. Pray a blessing over every household by name if the group is small enough. If your church does certificates, tonight's the night. Then ask one participant to share a sixty-second testimony with the congregation on Sunday — nothing fills the next workshop like it.

Discussion prompts

1. What's the single most important piece of wisdom you want to hand down?
2. How has this season changed the way you think about legacy — or about your own days?
3. Who in your life needs to do this workshop next — and will you invite them?

At home — the final assignment: Finish your faith statement and milestone messages. Put your Map in its home. Tell your person. Then rest — you have done a rare and loving thing.

Closing blessing: “Now may the God of peace, who raised our Lord Jesus from the dead, equip you with everything good. May your plans bless your children's children, may your story point them to Christ, and may you live every one of your numbered days in His joy. Amen.”

“Because love plans ahead.”
